

Brittany Goetsch, MA, MPH

Program Officer I | Johns Hopkins University, Center for Communication Programs

Brittany Goetsch is a Program Officer I for the DOVE project at the Johns Hopkins Center for Communications Programs. She supports knowledge management activities on the DOVE project including social media, the StopCholera.org website, blog, and the StopCholera toolkit. Her experience includes developing educational curriculum, training health and education professionals, designing strategic health plans, and managing large-scale community outreach events. She received her Bachelor of Arts in Political Science from The American University. She also holds a Master of Public Health in Global Health and a Masters of Arts in Latin American and Hemispheric Studies from The George Washington University.

Source URL: <https://stopcholera.org/blog/authors/brittany-goetsch-ma-mph>